Christmas Day and Miss Lucille Western are to arrive together, at Niblo's Garden. The conjuncery gratifying, for Christmas Day ought to ciated only with what is bright and merry and delightful. Miss Lucille Western did not rank in this category, when last she played in New-York. Her and suggested the bounding buffalo upon his native and No. 34 Fourth-ave., opposite Cooper Union, bancata have improved all this-"as he is very potent with such spirits"—and in that thought there is some comfort. That Miss Lucille Western will be warmly welcomed by a large class of people, there can be little doubt. Her popularity is defended by a large of the astonishing features of the massing hour. one of the autonishing features of the passing hourjust as that of Mrs. Henry Wood is, the novelist whose "East Lynne" has furnished Miss Western with an effective part. The pink of virtue and refinement who commits adultery, and dies in a terrible state of remorse and injured innocence, seems to have attained a permanent place in the esteem and admiration and spilling pity of this tender-hearted age.

Prior to the advent of that captivating heroine, ever, we are to have two opportunities of seeing Mr. Forrest, opportunities which an eager public will, doubtless, hasten to improve-making due allowance for that unsympathetic class of persons, who look upon Mr. Forrest's acting somewhat as Macbeth looked upon life, when, in his sere and yellow period, he characterized

These hard-hearted brutes, howbeit, constitute that majority which never rules, and may, therefore, be magnificently distained. Mr. Forrest will play Damon to-night, and Richellen, for his benefit, to-morrow night. On Saturday will take place the last performance of "Arrah-na-Pogue," the last appearnee of Mr. Glenney, the last vocal execution of "The Wearing of the Green." That occasion, surely, ought to win an immense andience. "Green Bushes" is in

Mr. Wallack announces that unusually clever things will be done at his theater on Christmas Day. We can well believe it. Mr. Wallack likewise announces that, in addition to "Love's Sacrifice," his company is about to disclose "Secrets Worth Knowing. One secret, meanwhile, that he has himself disclosed can scarcely be included in that collection. It appears that Tom Taylor has made a play out of Miss Braddon's novel of "The Outcast," which is presently to be acced here, under the title of "Harry Dunbar," phere The news is not good. Miss Braddon's works arise out of false, course and cheap principles in literary art, and their reproduction upon the stage can have but one sim-to minister to that ignorant and volgar taste for the sensutional which is already offensively predomibant. There is no need, however, to prejudge Mr. Taylor's play. Only, one cannot help regretting that the proffic play mongers, the Taylors and Bouciesults, etc., who supply us with theatrical food, should so often eater to concise appetites.

Miss Lucy Rushton is about to hang out her banner on the outward walls of that grie tabernacle latterly known as the Broad way Atheneum. Henceforth it will be known as Miss Lucy Rushton's New-York Theater. The outward walls to which we allude are now going up, and are nearly completed.
